13. ABSTRACT (Maximum 200 words) Designed as a research tool to aid in the understanding of Sino-Soviet rivalry in the Pacific region, these chronologies reflect the tenor of Chinese and Soviet interaction with countries in the Asian area. Early volumes cover these interactions with Japan, the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, the Democratic Republic of Korea, and the Republic of Vietnam, in the political, military, economic, scientific, or cultural fields. To reflect more accurately the nature of the Chinese and Soviet interactions, the country coverage was expanded in later issues to include Laos, the country coverage was expanded in later issues to include Laos, Kampuchea, Burma, India, Bangladesh, Pakistan, and the ASEAN nations (Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, and Thailand). Trends observed in the exchanges among the nations are summarized beginning with the January - June 1979 volume. Starting with the July - December 1982 issue, documentary appendixes have been added. Beginning with the January - June 1982 volume, matrices of Asian countries' interactions with China and the USSR were added. Sources are provided for each entry in all issues.

PREFACE

This chronology supplements Sino-Soviet Competition in Asia: A Chronology, 1976-1978 (DDB-2200-58-79), published in July 1979. It is intended as a research tool to aid in the understanding of Sino-Soviet rivalry in the Pacific region and reflects the tenor of Chinese and Soviet interaction with Japan, the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, the Democratic Republic of Korea, and the Republic of Korea by noting various political, military, economic, scientific, or cultural exchanges among these nations.

All information is derived from open sources available in the Library of Congress.

SUMMARY

Among events occurring during the 6-month period with which this chronology is concerned, China's invasion of Vietnam on 17 February 1979 stands out as the most significant. The invasion marked a low point in Chinese-Vietnamese relations, already characterized by consistent decline as Hanoi's ties with Moscow continued to strengthen. The Vietnam-USSR Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation signed in November 1978 together with Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia in December 1978 considerably hastened the final stages of the deterioration process and led ultimately to war. The invasion represented a direct clash of Chinese and Soviet interests in Asia. Of the various events reflecting Sino-Soviet rivalry in the region during the period under discussion, it came the closest to precipitating an armed Sino-Soviet confrontation.

The Sino-Vietnamese conflict permeated Japan's relationship with China and the Soviet Union as well. Japan's attempt to preserve stable relations with both the Chinese and the Soviet Governments in the wake of China's attack is reflected in its vacillating policies engendered by the border conflict. Refusing to condemn either side, Japan abstained from openly criticizing China's action, choosing instead to merely imply it to have been an hegemonistic act. Similarly, Japanese threats to Vietnam that economic aid would cease if the Vietnamese Government continued to permit the construction of Soviet military bases on its territory never materialized into actual policy.

Improving relations with the Soviet Union remained high on Japan's diplomatic agenda as the new year began, partially as a consequence of the Japanese Government's perception of Soviet sensitivity to its recently enacted Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation with China. However, the Soviet military presence in the Far East, particularly on the northern territorial islands of Kunashiri and Etorofu as well as the territorial dispute with the Soviet Union over sovereignty to the islands themselves, continued to trouble the Japanese.

Japan's relations with China continued to improve in the wake of the Sino-Japanese Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation. The bond between the two nations remained primarily economic as China replaced the United States as Japan's best customer for exported steel. Politically, the territorial dispute between the two countries over the Senkaku Islands flared briefly but failed to persevere.

For both China and the Soviet Union, relations with North and South Korea remained stable, with little significant change. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea maintained a consistent middle position between the two while the Republic of Korea sought to open trade relations with both countries. South Korea, nevertheless, was shunned by both when the Soviets chose not to participate in the World Basketball Championship held in Seoul and the Chinese excluded South Korea from participating in the Asian Youth Football Championship held in the PRC. Some small gains were achieved in ROK-USSR relations, however, as telephone communications were established in April between the two countries for the first time, and a delegation from South Korea was invited to attend a June International Social Security Association meeting in the USSR.

SRV/PRC. Han Nianlong, presents an 8-point proposal of principles for handling relations between China and Vietnam. They include: (1) The restoration of friendly relations between China and Vietnam based on mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual nonaggression, noninterference in each other's affairs, equality, and mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence; (2) neither side shall seek hegemony in Indochina, Southeast Asia, or any other part of the world; (3) the two sides shall respect the Sino-Vietnamese boundary line as delimited in the Sino-French boundary accords, which shall serve as the basis for a negotiated settlement of boundary and territorial disputes; (4) each side shall respect the other side's sovereignty over its 12-nautical-mile territorial sea, and the two sides shall demarcate their respective economic zones and continental shelves in the Beibu (Peipu) Gulf and other sea areas in accordance with international law; (5) the Xisha and Nansha (Spratly) Islands have always been a part of China's territory. The Vietnamese side shall revert to its previous position of recognizing this fact and will respect China's sovereignty over these two island groups; (6) nationals of one country residing in the other country shall respect the laws of that country and the government of the country of residence shall guarantee their proper rights; (7) in response to the wish for repatriation on the part of the Vietnamese citizens forcefully driven by the Vietnamese authorities into Chinese territory, the Vietnamese Government shall receive them back into the country and resettle them. The Chinese Government is prepared to facilitate their return in every way; (8) the restoration of railway traffic, trade, civil aviation, postal, and telecommunications services and other bilateral ties shall be dealt with by the departments concerned of the two countries through consultation.
